INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR PEACE THROUGH TOURISM

Peace Parks Across Canada

Communities and parks that dedicated an IIPT Peace Park for Canada 125

In 1992, to mark Canada's 125th anniversary, the International Institute for Peace through Tourism invited every community in Canada to dedicate a park as a "place of peace." The Peace Parks were dedicated at noon local time on October 8, 1992, as the National Peacekeeping Monument was unveiled in Ottawa, and each one includes a Peace Grove of 12 trees, one for each of Canada's 10 provinces and 2 territories. The program became the foundation for IIPT's International Peace Parks around the world. The municipalities, provincial and national parks below are listed by province, as published by IIPT.

Part of the British Columbia list is hidden in the copy we received. About three lines of names, between Kootenay National Park and Whistler, could not be read. Names marked * were read from a partly hidden line.

Notes and Source

Source. IIPT newsletter page "Nurturing the Growth of Peace" (PeaceParksList.pdf, page seven), which congratulates the municipalities, provincial and national parks taking part in Peace Parks Across Canada. The dedication date and Peace Grove details come from IIPT's 35-year history.

Why 381 and 347 differ. The 381 total is IIPT's own figure. This list has 347 names because part of the British Columbia section was hidden in the copy we received. The missing names can be added from the original PDF.

Names as printed. Names follow the original list and its order. The original groups Flin Flon and Fort Saskatchewan under Saskatchewan (Fort Saskatchewan also appears under Alberta), and "Newfoundland" is shown here by the province's current name, Newfoundland and Labrador. Only the clear misspellings below were corrected.
